For thirty days...

...Wakanda has lived in fear.

I hear them. When I am among them, they speak to me.

I will root the rot from our kingdom, Okoye. This war will end.

They are not scared of war.

They are scared of you.

"We are searching each other for enemies."

"Putting
our people
behind bars."

"Conducting interrogations."

"Our people cannot even grieve your father with our trust."

Among our people are servants of our enemies.

I am doing what must be done to protect us.

You're grieving, T'Challa. And angry.

And you're angry because you're afraid.

Fear is what anger truly is.

And what am I afraid of, my queen?

What all men fear.

That what they are will never be good enough.

Your burden is great. You must honor your father. You must protect your people and your nation. You must be their king, and their knight-warrior.

T'Challa...

...you are what Wakanda needs.

I must speak with the Vodou-Khan today. They have counsel for me.

And I have counsel for you.

Do not trust them. They serve their prophecies. They don't serve you.

Do not serve them.
